9.30am Building a Library: Roger Parker listens to and compares the available recordings of Handel's opera Ariodante.

Handel's operas were the talk of the smart set in early 18th Century London. The exotic mix of temperamental prima donnas and castrati with Handel's sublime music was a potent combination. And Ariodante was one of the very best of his operas. It contains a series of extraordinary arias for the title role from the mournful aria, "Scherza infida" to the joyful "Dopo notte" with exciting vocal acrobatics.

SAT 12:15 Music Matters (m00022jv)

Amo amas amat-eur orchestras! And Arnold in the US

Tom Service talks to the German super-star soprano Diana Damrau, as she takes a residency at the Barbican Centre in London, singing mainly the music of Richard Strauss. Damrau's amazing coloratura and remarkable stage presence make her one of the most admired and sought after singers in today's opera world, but she's equally good at intimate song recitals too.

Tom takes a look at the amateur orchestra scene in the UK - their repertoire and how they build a sense of community around music - including postcards of three ensembles from around the country: the Nottingham Philharmonic Orchestra, the Cardiff Philharmonic Orchestra and the North London Sinfonia.

A new book has compiled Arnold Schoenberg's correspondence with more than 70 American composers throughout his life: Tom talks to its compiler and translator, Sabine Feisst.

Plus Hidden Voices: Kathleen Schlesinger, whose pioneering research at the turn of the 20th century into ancient Greek instruments and tuning systems deserves recognition in today's world.

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (b0bbp794)

The unique insights of guitarist Sean Shibe

Guitarist Sean Shibe describes how Respighi creates the vastness of underground catacombs in sound, explores the appeal of Stokowski's dramatic treatment of JS Bach, and discovers how violinist Andrew Manze conjures up the joy of human existence in a piece by Vivaldi.

At 2 o'clock Sean reveals his Must Listen piece - a seductive, but seldom played 20th century work, with, according to Sean, 'glacial textures like levitating sheets of glass'.

SAT 18:30 Opera on 3 (m00022k4)

From the Met

Pelléas et Mélisande

Tonight's opera from the Met is Debussy's strange and seductive Pelleas et Melisande. Prince Golaud finds a mysterious young woman lost in the forest, and marries her. But when Melisande meets his younger half-brother Pelleas, she finds herself irresistibly drawn to him, with tragic results. Young Met stars, tenor Paul Appleby and mezzo-soprano Isabel Leonard, are the naïve title lovers, and baritone Kyle Ketelsen is the imperious Prince Golaud.

Presented from the Met by Mary Jo Heath and Ira Siff.

SAT 22:15 Hear and Now (m00022k6)

Carl Stone and People Like Us

Robert Worby presents music by Carl Stone and People Like Us, two contrasting composers of electronic music, recorded at Café Oto in London last year.

The programme includes in-depth interviews with the composers about their different approaches to composing, as well as the full sets performed in the concert.

Carl Stone is a senior figure in American electronic music, and a pioneer in live computer music. He samples short clips from existing musics, and uses this material to create a rich and constantly changing textural music.

People Like Us (aka Vicki Bennett) also samples other music, but her approach is collage-based and more like a dream narrative exploring a particular theme - in this concert, she performs her extended work called The Mirror.

Sarah Walker's Sunday morning selection includes American music from Ferdé Grofé and George Gershwin. There's earlier music from Lassus, Haydn's Symphony No 78 in C minor, as well as music from Rossini and Schumann. This week's Sunday Escape is Noche de Yucat by Mexican composer, violinist and conductor Silvestre Revueltas..

SUN 12:00 Private Passions (m00022nq)

Tim Firth

Tim Firth is the man behind the show that captured the nation's heart: Calendar Girls, the true story about a Women's Institute who produced a naked calendar. It's been a film, a play, and is now a musical.

He's also responsible for the hugely successful film Kinky Boots, as well as multi-award winning TV shows, films and more musicals including Neville's Island, The Flint Street Nativity, Preston Front, and most recently The Band, a collaboration with his long-time friend Gary Barlow and Take That.

But surprisingly there are no songs from musical theatre in Tim's choices for Private Passions. Instead he shares with Michael Berkeley his love of Baroque, with music from Bach and from Albinoni (first heard on his honeymoon), and he chooses music by Delius and by Copland that resonates with the folk music he loved as a child.

Tim talks movingly about the emotional impact of music in his life, whether it's writing the perfect song for a show or being spellbound by hearing Gorecki for the first time in a forest in the Lake District.

William Hayes's Fall of Jericho

18th-century composer William Hayes' oratorio "The Fall of Jericho" was all but forgotten until it was rediscovered fairly recently and a new performing edition made. Hayes was born and grew up in Gloucester and was a well-respected composer in his day. He helped to set up the Holywell Music Room in Oxford, and his music was often performed there to sell-out crowds. Sadly, he's now virtually unheard of. Lucie Skeaping talks to Hayes fan Simon Heighes about the piece and its composer.

Classical Icons

As BBC 2's epic history series Icons is underway, Tom Service takes a closer look at four icons of the classical music world: Maria Callas, Nigel Kennedy, Jacqueline du Pré, and Luciano Pavarotti. With the help of opera critic Anna Picard Tom asks whether these icons are born or whether they're made, and what factors (beyond great artistry and talent) are at play in the making of an icon.

SUN 17:30 Words and Music (m00022nz)

The Pre-Raphaelites

"They meant revolt, and produced revolution": that's how one critic described the group of late 19th-century artists, poets and writers who came to be known as the Pre-Raphaelites. Actors Jamie Glover and Skye Hallam read words by the Pre-Raphaelites themselves, alongside the sources and subject matter that so fascinated them. Our journey through their artistic universe takes us from Malory's Arthurian legends and the love poetry of Dante Alighieri in the 13th century, to the sometimes coruscating reviews of Victorian contemporaries like Charles Dickens.

Pre-Raphaelite art is full of woeful maidens with flowing hair, and many suggest that the real women who posed for the likes of Rossetti and Millais were exploited. We'll hear the death of Ophelia described by Shakespeare's Gertrude alongside poetry by Elizabeth Siddal, the celebrated muse who posed for Millais' painting Ophelia, spending days on end fully clothed in a bath full of freezing water.

Musically, we start with Gilbert and Sullivan's Overture to Patience, an operetta that included a character satirising the ever-so-slightly pompous Pre-Raphaelites. There's also the glistening sound of Debussy's cantata La Damoiselle élue (The Blessed Damozel), based on Rossetti's poem of the same name, and a song from modern-day Pre-Raphaelite Florence Welch.

We finish with words by the only female member of the Pre-Raphaelite clan, Christina Rossetti, musing on how a painter's gaze always renders "One face" looking "out from all his canvases". That's set against Martha Wainwright's heart breaking song Proserpina, bringing to mind Rossetti's famous painting of Proserpine - a captive goddess looking out of the Pre-Raphaelite canvas.

SUN 18:45 Sunday Feature (m00022p1)

Afterwords: Susan Sontag

In our new series 'Afterwords', we explore the ideas of great writers in their own words - as archive recordings in which they articulate their approach interweave with the thoughts of contemporary writers, academics and activists.

Through the '60s and '70s up to her death in 2004, Susan Sontag was the embodiment of the fashionable, metropolitan, 'public intellectual'. Her writings on 'camp', on photography, on illness (she survived and then died from cancer at a time when the C word was almost taboo) and the suffering of others, together with her activism and her art, came to be shared with millions through the medium for which she had very little time as a viewer - television. And her radio interviews on the BBC and elsewhere cemented her reputation.

With contributions from her West Coast friend and scholar Terry Castle, the war correspondent Allan Little who got to know her well during the Siege of Sarajevo, the writer and broadcaster Lisa Appignanesi who achieved a rare intimacy in one interview for Night Waves, Andrew Bolton (curator of a forthcoming exhibition called 'Camp: Notes on Fashion' at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York), the journalist, critic and Sontag 'fan-boy' Boyd Tonkin and the writer Elif Şafak who continues to work in Sontag's long shadow, we take a close listen to the American writer and examine her legacy.

Arden of Faversham

In 1551 in Tudor England, Alice and her lover Mosby conspire with hired killers to murder Alice's husband Arden. This anonymous play is the first example of a brutal true crime story on the English stage and resonates with our contemporary fascination with all things 'noir'. Based closely on Holinshed's detailed account of the murder, it was first published in 1592.

SUN 22:00 Early Music Late (m00022p7)

London Calling: violin works from the Baroque capital

Beautiful and unusual works spanning two centuries by Byrd, Geminiani, Babell, Matteis, Eccles, given by Iliia Korol (violin) and Jermaine Sprosse (harpsichord). London has always drawn artists and musicians to its cultural heart, and perhaps especially so in the Baroque era. German-born Handel spent most of his career in the English capital, and not only composed his finest works but also influenced notable local musicians such as William Babell. Such successes attracted musicians from other English cities, as well as places as far-flung as Italy. But it wasn't all grand gestures - this concert presents works for smaller ensembles and drawing rooms, by turns florid, intimate and fun.

SUN 23:00 Percussion Century (m00022p9)

Going solo

Crash, bang, wallop?

No! Colin Currie suggests you think again as he embarks on a journey of sonic exploration. In this episode, percussion is truly set free as Colin chooses some of the most innovative, exquisite and powerful music written for percussion over the past century.

When thirteen percussionists lined up on stage in New York in 1933 to play Ionisation by Edgar Varèse, solo percussion music was firmly planted on the musical map. Composers and performers suddenly became aware of the huge expressive potential of a family of instruments that had previously been used primarily for rhythmic accompaniment and occasional sound effects.

In the decades that followed many more composers started writing for percussion ensembles and soloists, allowing musicians like Colin to thrive. He'll be introducing a piece played on tuned metal pipes, music for huge multi-percussion set-ups, and the sound of one of the most beautiful and versatile of all percussion instruments, the marimba. Plus an entertaining solo from the jazz master Buddy Rich.

Franz Liszt (1811-1886)

The Ninth Wonder of the World

Franz Liszt was the most photographed man of the 19th century and the most sculpted man aside from Napoleon - one of the most recognisable figures of his age. Donald Macleod delves into the life and work of the prolific composer and virtuoso pianist through five images of the composer. Liszt's acclaim as a child was such that he was even claimed to be a reincarnation of Mozart. In Monday's episode, Donald examines an engraving of the 9 year-old Liszt after a portrait by Ferdinand de Luttgendorf-Leinburg, using it to trace the influence of Liszt's father Adam in the promotion of his son as this child prodigy extraordinaire.

Franz Liszt (1811-1886)

The Idol

Franz Liszt was the most photographed man of the 19th century and the most sculpted man aside from Napoleon - one of the most recognisable figures of his age. Donald Macleod delves into the life and work of the prolific composer and virtuoso pianist through five images of the composer. Liszt rose to become the greatest performer of his age - effectively inventing the idea of the piano recital - his playing amazing audiences across Europe. In Tuesday's episode, Donald examines the earliest photograph of Liszt we have - taken in 1843 by Herman Biow - and Henri Lehmann's portrait of the composer from four years earlier. Through these images, Donald explores the impact that Liszt's astute managing of his image had on the idea of him as a Romantic idol, and examining the various elements which went into creating the dramatic persona of Liszt the virtuoso.

TUE 14:00 Afternoon Concert (m000231j)
Prague Spring Festival

Dvořák's dramatic cantata The Spectre's Bride, a Bach Chorale & the premiere of the suite from West Side Story arranged for piano trio, all performed at the Prague Spring Festival. The Spectre's Bride was commissioned for the 1885 Birmingham festival but first tried out in the Bohemian city of Pilsen a few months earlier. Based on a poem by Karel Jaromír Erben, about a young girl who is abducted by a ghost she believes to be the spirit of her lover, it is a wonderful example of Dvořák's ability to combine folkloric qualities with brilliant compositional technique – with the added bonus of a solid morality tale. Later in the afternoon we'll hear a concert by the Smetana Trio featuring music by Zemlinsky, Smetana and an arrangement of some very familiar Bernstein.

Beethoven Piano Concerto No 4

Recorded at Brangwyn Hall Swansea

Presented by Nicola Heywood Thomas

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No 4 in G major
Mahler: Rückert Lieder

8.10 Interval - Nicola Heywood Thomas talks to Stephen Hough

Mahler: Adagio (Symphony No 10)

Stephen Hough (piano)
Catriona Morison (mezzo soprano)
BBC National Orchestra of Wales
Thomas Sondergard (conductor)

The visionary solo piano opening to Beethoven's 4th concerto begins a work which not only marked a move away from his previous piano concerti, but also marks a change for the composer as the public premiere of the work was the last time that he would perform with an orchestra due to the decline in his hearing. Almost a century later, Mahler chose to set music to the romantic poetry of Friederich Rückert, a favourite poet of his, in which he brings the evocative texts to life. Although they were originally written as five individual songs for voice and piano, Mahler quickly orchestrated four of these songs and, along with the posthumous orchestration of the 5th by Max Puttmann, they are now often presented as a cycle as they will be tonight. The concert concludes with the Adagio from Mahler's unfinished 10th symphony, which was the only section which he had ostensibly completed and orchestrated. The tragedy in the music bears direct relation to the turmoil of Mahler's life at the time of composition and the poignant music is made even more touching with the knowledge that these were to be some of the last notes that Mahler would write.

Slow Looking at Art

What's the best way to look at a work of art? Should we spend hours in profound contemplation? What about looking more than once? And will a quick glance be just as rewarding? As new shows featuring the Post-impressionist, Pierre Bonnard and the video artist, Bill Viola, open in London Eleanor Rosamund Barraclough is joined by the artists, Aura Satz and Michael Craig-Martin, the poet and art historian, Kelly Grovier and the writer and neuroscientist, Daniel Glaser to discuss how we experience art from the current vogue for slow looking to the thirty second appraisal scientists say is the norm for most gallery goers.

Kelly Grovier's book 'A New Way of Seeing: The History of Art in 57 Works' is out now.

Fragmented opera and carbophones

Shattering musical moulds with Verity Sharp.

Ostraca are fragments of ancient pottery. Irish composer Roger Doyle uses them as inspiration for his new work, breaking his opera into shards that he puts through a MIDI keyboard and relayers.

More innovation from Cologne's Andreas O. Hirsch, who has developed the carbophone, an electroacoustic instrument inspired by thumb pianos such as the kalimba and mbira. The promenade of an octopus and a shipwrecked robot are among the musical vignettes to emerge on his new album.

And Verity picks music from a less fractured lineage, from Irish fiddler Martin Hayes.

Leeds International Chamber Series

Schubert and Friends (3 of 4)

Sam Haywood has curated the third of four broadcasts from The Venue at Leeds College of Music which explore the chamber works of Schubert and some of his peers. The series continues with an exploration of the Impromptu. Sam performs a piece from little heard Czech composer Jan Vaclav Vorisek's Op. 7 Impromptus, believed to be the first time the title 'Impromptu' was used to describe a musical work. This is followed by two further Impromptus from Schubert's D. 899 set.

Soprano Ailish Tynan returns to perform three more Schubert songs with Sam, before clarinettist Katherine Spencer has her own chance to shine with Sam in Schumann's Fantasiestucke Op.73. The programme concludes with violinist Jack Liebeck and cellist Guy Johnston joining Sam at the piano for the final time this week in Schubert's single movement Notturmo.

Vorisek: Impromptu, Op.7

Ulster Orchestra

The Ulster Orchestra are joined by their Artistic Director, conductor Rafael Payare, for this concert of music by Richard Strauss and Dmitri Shostakovich. Soprano Dorothea Röschmann will open the concert with Strauss's Four Last Songs, written towards the end of the composer's life when he was aged 84, and published after his death in 1949 by his friend Ernst Roth. The work can be said in many ways to be a reflection of Strauss's own life - the work is for solo soprano and orchestra and contains prominent sections for the horn; Strauss's father Franz was a professional horn player and his wife, Pauline de Ahna, a soprano.

Three of the poems which Strauss set to music are around the subject of death, indeed in his setting of "Im Abendrot" he actually quotes a passage from his earlier work "Death and Transfiguration", the so-called "transfiguration theme".

Shostakovich's Symphony No. 4 in C minor, although written between 1935-36, wouldn't actually receive its premiere for another 25 years, eventually being performed by the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra in December 1961 under conductor Kirill Kondrashin. During the piece's composition, Shostakovich was coming under increased scrutiny and criticism from Stalin, who ordered a scathing piece to be written, denouncing the composer in the communist publication 'Pravda.' This may have been the reason Shostakovich decided to withdraw the work for its planned performance in Leningrad in December 1936. When asked by colleagues about the article, the composer replied, "I don't write for Pravda, I write for myself."

The orchestra in the symphony is enormous, boasting 4 flutes and 2 piccolos, 5 clarinets and 8 horns alongside 2 harps and a vast percussion section.

Franz Liszt (1811-1886)

Liszt's 'vie trifurquee'

Franz Liszt was the most photographed man of the 19th century and the most sculpted man aside from Napoleon - one of the most recognisable figures of his age. Donald Macleod delves into the life and work of the prolific composer and virtuoso pianist through five images of the composer. In the final episode of the week, Donald examines a photograph of Liszt taken by Ferencz Kózmata in Budapest in 1873, noting how in later life, the promoted image of the composer changed to that of a distinguished cleric, a spiritual dreamer in touch with the sages. Yet in this period, Liszt was more troubled than in any other part of his life. Donald explores the lengths he went to, to try and maintain a balance in his life - a period when he lived a "threefold existence" - splitting his time between Rome, Weimar and Budapest and travelling over 4000 miles a year.

Brahms: Trio for viola, cello and piano in A minor, Op 114

Bloch: From Jewish Life for cello and piano

Ravel: Kaddish for viola and piano

Shostakovich: Piano Trio No 2 in E minor, Op 67

Lawrence Power, viola

Natalie Clein, cello

Simon Crawford-Phillips, piano

Lawrence Power is joined by two distinguished colleagues for a magical evening of chamber music. The programme combines works for duo with two major piano trios including Brahms' work which was inspired by the clarinettist Richard Mühlfeld.

The composer prepared a viola part as a possible alternative instrumentation, and both scorings were rehearsed (the viola part being played by Joseph Joachim) prior to the premiere and publication of the piece. The second half takes Jewish Song as the connective strand, concluding with Shostakovich's heartfelt Trio, completed in 1944 in memory of one of the composer's closest friends, Ivan Sollertinsky.
