SAT 09:00 Saturday Morning (m002j61q) Conductor Elim Chan talks Last Night of the Proms Tom Service with guests, stories and the perfect classical soundtrack to start the weekend! Tom Service chats to the brilliant conductor Elim Chan. She's been described on the podium as "a superhero bending the sonic environment to her will" and is known for her expressive and exciting performances. She joins Tom on the day she conducts the Last Night of the BBC Proms. Will she reveal any details of the speech she'll give from the podium? Traditionally a chance to reflect on the last year of the music industry, the young conductor will have plenty to say. The Kanneh-Mason family are the country's most exciting and remarkable musical family - and ahead of the 7 siblings releasing their new album "River of Music". Braimah, Jeneba and Aminata Kanneh-Mason pop into the studio to perform live and talk to Tom about the album, as they describe it "a story about our family and the sources of our music". And composer Oliver Leith talks about his musical journey so far and his new piece 'Garland' that is getting its premiere at Bold Tendencies in Peckham's multi-storey car park this week. A spectacular procession of sound, music and singing, it includes an orchestra and chorus of 118 performers augmented by a horse, bicycles, car and other pedestrian detritus 'played' to create a huge noise inside Peckham's 'concrete concert hall'. His guest is the composer Anoesjcka DeLorenzo who introduces music she loves by Smetana and Sibelius. To listen on most smart speakers just say "Ask BBC Sounds to	play Earlier with Jools Holland". SAT 13:00 Music Matters (m0027bzy) Satire and the Stave Parody, Homage and Pastiche In the final episode of this six-part series, writer and satirist Chris Addison (The Thick Of It, Veep) explores how music has long been used as a tool for satire and parody. Chris has chosen tracks spanning centuries, which have parody and pastiche at their very heart. This programme features music by PDQ Bach, Gustav Mahler, Camille Saint-Saëns, Teresa Carreño, Joseph Haydn and more. In this series, Chris Addison - himself a classical music devotee, keen amateur choral singer and opera buff - takes listeners on a tour of how composers have used their music to question, parody, and challenge power and ideas over the years. Classical music can amplify power, but it can also undermine it - satirising and thumbing the nose at the status quo. Composers have used classical music to critique, undermine and even lampoon - often in cleverly nuanced, surprising ways that reconnect us to the flawed humans - and shared humanity - beneath the pomposity. Each episode in this series takes a big idea, and illustrates it with a playlist of entertaining and diverse music spanning the entire history of Western classical music. Your perfect Sunday soundtrack

Sarah Walker with three hours of classical music to reflect, restore and refresh, after the highs of last night's triumphant Proms finale!

Sarah shares music by some of her favourite artists from this year's Proms season, and reflects on the Last Night of the Proms. Her choices today include a range of music chosen to help revitalise you, including Haydn's bubbly Trumpet Concerto, a luscious movement from a symphony by Rachmaninoff, and the opening of Beethoven's mighty 'Emperor' Concerto. And today's Choral Reflection takes her back to a spine tingling Prom from the Estonian Philharmonic Chamber Choir.

Plus, devilish music from a landmark new release reissuing a classic recording from David Oistrakh...

Mark Kermode

Mark Kermode began reviewing films 40 years ago, and has established himself as one of our most foremost critics, both in print and on air. He co-presents Screenshot on Radio 4 and the podcast Kermode and Mayo's Take, with his long-term collaborator Simon Mayo. He's said he goes to every screening hoping it will be the next Citizen Kane – but he's also renowned for his energetic rants against the films he finds most disappointing. Music is another lifelong love – and for nearly 30 years he's played double bass in The Dodge Brothers, a skiffle band who have also performed live soundtracks for silent movies. And film music is the subject of his most recent book, Mark Kermode's Surround Sound, examining the complex relationship between what we hear and what we see. Mark's music includes Mica Levi, Strauss and Jelly Roll Morton.

SUN 13:30 Music Map (m002j4p2)
A journey to Ethel Smyth's Concerto for Violin, Horn and Orchestra

Sara Mohr-Pietsch plots a course towards the Concerto for Violin, Horn and Orchestra by Ethel Smyth, a composer best known for her support of the women's suffrage movement in the early twentieth century - she spent two months in prison for her activism. On the way, we hear music from other composers who were in prison, including a prelude by JS Bach, and a movement from Messiaen's Quartet for the End of Time, written in a Second World War prisoner-of-war camp. Smyth's concerto was composed in 1927, and there's other music from that year, including an early recording by Louis Armstrong; and we make a stop at a recording by one of the original concerto soloists, the violinist Jelly d'Aranyi.

The Medici Popes - Part 1: Cousins in arms

In this first of two programmes, Hannah French explores the lives of two 16th Century Popes: Leo X and Clement VII, and the music that surrounded them.

Giovanni & Giulio were cousins, brought up together in the wealthy and influential Florentine household of the Medici. Giovanni's father, Lorenzo "The Magnificent" and his brother Giuliano were the rulers of the Florentine Republic. In 1478, though, Giuliano de Medici was murdered in Florence Cathedral as part of the Pazzi Conspiracy. As a result, young Giulio was brought up by his uncle. Both boys were guided into a career in the church, and because of the financial and political backing that came with the Medici name, it was clear they were both destined for high office.

In 1513, Giovanni de Medici was elected as Pope Leo X. He made Rome a strong political power, and as a generous patron of the arts, he helped writers, poets, painters and musicians of the High Renaissance to flourish. But, his lavish tastes depleted the papal treasury, and made many enemies who accused him of being "engrossed in idle and selfish amusements". By 1517, would-be reformers in northern Europe had had enough of papal excesses, and Martin Luther published his 95 theses which were to be the start of the Protestant Reformation.

The young Giovanni de Medici was said to have had a fine ear and a melodious voice, and "loved music to the pitch of fanaticism". It's possible he learned from the great Heinrich Isaac, who was the shining musical light in late 15th Century Florence. As Pope Leo X he expanded the Sistine Chapel choir, and procured the services of professional singers, instrumentalists and composers from all over Europe.

Genius, Polymaths and Prodigies

From teenage compositions by Mozart to fictional images of Professors and boffins, via artists, scientists and star performers - today's programme explores ideas about genius. What is genius? What makes a prodigy? Or, crowns a polymath? We hear definitions from writers including Helen Lewis, Mark Twain and George Bernard Shaw and descriptions of figures such as Bryon's daughter the mathematician, Ada Lovelace, the painter Leonardo da Vinci, American President Abraham Lincoln and writer Gertrude Stein. Poems by Wordsworth and Pope explore the idea of the genius loci, the power of a place and the novels Lessons in Chemistry, Chocky and Matilda give us pictures of exceptional children. The composers featured include Bach, Mozart, Clara Schumann and Beethoven.

The Thousand Voices of Cathy Berberian

An immersive audio dive into the life and voice of the iconic singer Cathy Berberian, who was born 100 years ago this year.

Cathy Berberian was a singer like no other. She was an incredible virtuoso with a 3 octave range, but also a fantastic actress, a comedienne, a mimic, a composer, a multi-linguist and a fearless experimenter. She was known as "Magnific-Cathy" because she had a thousand voices.

Despite starting out as a 'square' classical opera singer, her firm belief that the voice could do anything meant she became one of the most important voices in contemporary music.

Berberian was nicknamed the "Callas of the Avant-Garde", as composers queued up to write for her and she pushed the boundaries of what the voice can do to its very limits: from her avant-garde collaborations with her husband, the composer Luciano Berio, to her own iconic piece Stripsody where she experimented with the sounds of comic book strips. Berberian was also one of the great stage performers - charming and magnetic, at times breathtaking, at others goofy - and able to have an audience in the palm of her hand whether she was singing contemporary music, French chansons or songs by the Beatles.

With recordings of Cathy from the BBC archives, we also hear the voices of Berberian scholars Francesca Placanica and Pamela Karantonis, soprano H  lo  se Werner, plus conductor Michael Tilson Thomas and mezzo soprano Linda Hirst, who knew Cathy in the 1970s.

Samuel Coleridge-Taylor and Paul Laurence Dunbar

Music historian Leah Broad hears about the meeting in London in 1897 between the African American poet, Paul Laurence Dunbar and the British composer of Sierra Leonean descent, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor. The men became friends with Coleridge-Taylor setting a number of Dunbar's poems to music. Their collaboration also set a template for Black poets and composers of the twentieth century. Leah is joined by Samantha Ege, author pianist and music historian and by Justin Tackett, an academic who specialises in transatlantic literature to explore The African Romances.

Witold Lutoslawski: fate, struggle and controlling chance

Kate Molleson and Gillian Moore present BBC Radio 3's series exploring the pivotal 'modern' musical works of the 20th century, the groundbreaking composers who created them, and the radical cultural and artistic movements which gave rise to them. In this episode, Gillian explores the beautiful, fractious musical world of the Polish composer Witold Lutoslawski.

leading to a full performance of his 3rd Symphony. We will explore the underground radical art of Poland created during a period of martial law in the 1980s, chance upon an out-of-tune masterpiece born from the loft scene in 1960s Manhattan, and travel back to the revolutionary music of Beethoven via the lens of a 20th-century Hungarian visionary.

Elgar live from Wigmore Hall

Linton Stephens rings you an afternoon of exclusive music-making including Elgar's Violin Sonata from violinist Daniel Hope and pianist Simon Crawford-Phillips live from Wigmore Hall and Shostakovich with the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra.

The week begins with a concert direct from London's Wigmore Hall with a programme of two superlative works by English composers, both infused with profound melancholy and dramatic tension.

Throughout the week, there will be recorded highlights from this summer's Edinburgh International Festival. Leonidas Kavakos and The Apollon Ensemble perform Bach, the NFM Leopoldinum Orchestra perform Bartok, and Canadian pianist Ryan Wang draws from Chopin's stylishly crafted collection of Mazurkas.

Plus, the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra - who have been making an ever increasing survey of Shostakovich's music, offer listeners some of the orchestra's more recent bespoke recordings, marking 50 years since the composer's death. Today, the dramatic and colourful Symphony No 12 "The Year 1917" conducted by John Storgards.

Symphony of the Wild

1. Noise Meets Music

Music is thought to be a phenomenon unique to humans. But does it echo much deeper into the story of life on earth? Ben Garrod, Professor of Evolutionary Biology at the University of East Anglia is on a mission to uncover a world of unexpected rhythm and melody across nature and in doing so, question our assumptions about the boundaries of musical expression and its role.

From melodic songbirds, to frogs chirping through the night, to whales mournfully calling across the oceans, nature is full of fantastic music. Not all of it sounds pleasant to the human ear, yet it's hard not to admire the way animals make such complex and astounding noises. In his search to discover if musicality is something with a long evolutionary history that we share with other animals, Ben begins by exploring the blurred line where noise meets music, cacophony slips into melody and racket is replaced by rhythm.

With contributions from naturalist and musician Prof. David Rosenberg from the New Jersey Institute of Technology and Dr Emily Doolittle, Athenaeum Research Fellow and lecturer in composition at the Royal Conservatoire of Scotland.

Cécile McLorin Salvant's 4/4

'Round Midnight is presented by award-winning saxophonist Soweto Kinch. This weekday late-night show celebrates the thriving UK jazz scene and spotlights the best new music alongside incredible acts from past decades.

From Monday to Thursday this week, Soweto is joined by French-American composer, singer, visual artist and master storyteller Cécile McLorin Salvant. Cécile is internationally celebrated for her vocal dexterity and daring, her compositional inventiveness, and is recognised as one of contemporary jazz's leading singers. Among her many accolades Cécile has won three Grammy Awards, the Thelonious Monk International Jazz Competition in 2010, and is a MacArthur Fellow.

Her music weaves a broad range of influences including jazz, baroque, folkloric music and vaudeville, always with humour and inquisitiveness. A multi-linguist, Cécile sings in French and English, as well as Occitan and Haitian Kreyòl.

Cécile's new album "Oh Snap" is out this Friday 19th September.

To begin her week as Soweto's 4/4 guest, Cécile chooses to spotlight a record by a vocalist, poet, and an early champion of bebop.

There's also music tonight from J.A.M. String Collective, Fabia Mantwill Orchestra, and Sloth Racket.

Ian Bostridge, Antonio Pappano and members of the LSO perform Britten, Vaughan Williams and Elgar at the Edinburgh International Festival 2025.

With conductor and pianist Antonio Pappano at the piano, tenor Ian Bostridge performs Benjamin Britten's settings of Thomas Hardy, Winter Words.

This is followed by Ralph Vaughan Williams' 1909 song Cycle, On Wenlock Edge, which sets poems by A E Housman and the "French polish" of his recent lessons with Maurice Ravel can be heard in this sophisticated composition for string quartet, piano and voice.

In the second half the LSO string players and Antonio Pappano perform Elgar's Piano Quintet in A Minor from 1918. Composed at the end of World War I, and one of Elgar's final works, it is a powerful and very human response to the horrors of the previous years.

In doing so, he questions our assumptions about the boundaries of musical expression and its role. Is musicality something with a long evolutionary history that we share with other animals?

There's more to animal calls than just taking a deep breath and hollering. Some animals play their bodies like instruments, and others make sounds that we as humans need sensitive technology to decipher. Ben explores hard percussive patterns intricate skipping and melodious song that opens our minds to nature's capacity to create musical forms. In crossing the sound barrier into a world of sonorous calls from humpback whales, he explores how, like us, animal-produced music is subject to culture, trends and regional dialects.

Bach's Concerto for two violins from Edinburgh

Nicola Benedetti and Alexander Sitkovetsky perform Bach together in a programme featuring specially recorded highlights from this summer's Edinburgh International Festival plus an exploration of the music of Shostakovich from the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra, introduced by Linton Stephens.

Throughout the week, Classical Live brings you specially recorded highlights from the Edinburgh International Festival. Today, the NFM Leopoldinum Orchestra and director Alexander Sitkovetsky are joined by violinist Nicola Benedetti to perform one of Bach's best loved concertos; violinist Bomsori Kim performs music by Wieniawski and Bacewicz with pianist Thomas Hoppe and Canadian pianist Ryan Wang returns with more from the pen of Chopin.

Plus the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra continues its focus on the music of Dmitri Shostakovich, marking 50 years since his death. Today, the powerful and autobiographical Chamber Symphony, a transcription for orchestra of the composer's best known string quartet, is conducted by Anna Rakitina.

We will also hear mezzo soprano Sophie Rennett join forces with pianist James Middleton to perform a group of songs by Franz Schubert, recorded at London's Wignmore Hall.

At the heart of the mixtape is the breathtaking Ulrich movement of Gustav Mahler's second symphony, in a beautiful recording by Jessye Norman with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. We also hear works by Clara Schumann and Frederick Delius before the mixtape concludes with a pair of serene choral works, composed by Frank Ticheli and Aleksandr Grechaninov. Producer: Christina Kenny WED 19:30 Radio 3 in Concert (m002j6js) Edinburgh International Festival: Bernstein & Stravinsky The highly in-demand conductor Karina Canellakis returns to the Edinburgh International Festival to lead this monumental programme with the Edinburgh Festival Chorus and the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, characterised by thrilling sounds and ideas of love, divine or human. The moving symphonic work Les Offrandes Oubliées made Olivier Messiaen's name aged just 22, his devout Catholicism driving this three-part meditation on eternal mysteries and human sin. When the Dean of Chichester Cathedral commissioned Leonard Bernstein to write the Chichester Psalms in 1965, he hinted they'd be delighted if it had 'something of the West Side Story' about it. Bernstein came through. Its jazzy inflections promise a thrilling workout for the Festival Chorus and emotive countertenor Hugh Cutting. For the finale, Igor Stravinsky's dazzling 1911 ballet Petrushka is brilliantly reorchestrated by the composer in 1947 for the concert platform. Recorded at Edinburgh's Usher Hall on 21 August 2025, presented by Donald Macleod. WED 21:45 The Essay (m002j6jx) Symphony of the Wild 3. Plant Rhythms Ben Garrod, Professor of Evolutionary Biology at the University of East Anglia is on a mission to uncover a world of unexpected rhythm and melody across the natural world. Might a truly universal sense of musicality exist across nature? Ben eavesdrops on some of the most primitive sources of wild music. Could plants be the most oldest and most unexpected musicians in nature? From the flora in the tallest towering forests to aquatic plants deep within in ponds and rivers, sounds are being produced in abundance. Some appear passively acoustic whilst others are buzzing and rhythmically popping and creating what some hear as music at a truly fundamental level. It hints at the possibility of an archaic plant based proto-music, an almost constant rhythmic companion throughout the evolutionary journey of life on our planet. With contributions from palaeobotanist Mary Gagen, Professor of physical geography at Swansea University; David De La Haye, aquatic ecological sound artist. Symphony of the Wild

4. Wild Soundscapes

Ben Garrod, Professor of Evolutionary Biology at the University of East Anglia is on a mission to uncover a world of unexpected rhythm and melody across the natural world. Might a truly universal sense of musicality exist across nature?

In this essay, Ben shifts his focus away from individual birds calling out at dawn, the solo songs of talented humpback whales or the musicality of eerie botanical arias from forests to a wider more collaborative scale. Like any good orchestral piece, is music in nature to be found in a symphony of wild musicians all playing together to create what we might call a musical soundscape?

He examines the dawn chorus to weigh up whether individual singers are all at the mercy of individual selection communicating simply to defend territory and attract a mate. Or is there a more intimate relationship within these wild songs with different species playing alongside one another harmoniously?

With contributions from Simon Butler Professor of Applied Ecology at the University of East Anglia; musician and naturalist Professor David Rosenberg from the New Jersey Institute of Technology.

FRI 13:00 Classical Live (m002j6ng)

Shostakovich's First Symphony

Bach and Paderewski feature among the specially recorded highlights from this summer's Edinburgh International Festival alongside the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra in concert with Shostakovich. Presented by Linton Stephens.

Classical Live concludes its week of specially recorded highlights from the Edinburgh International Festival with violinist Alexander Sitkovetsky and the NFM Leopoldinum Orchestra performing Andrzej Panufnik's poignant Violin Concerto as part of a concert marking the legacy of the great violin prodigy Yehudi Menuhin. South Korean violinist Bomsori Kim is also at Edinburgh, with pianist Thomas Hoppe, performing Polish music, including today, a work by former Polish leader and pianist Ignacy Paderewski. And Leonidas Kavakos and The Apollon Ensemble round up its series of performances of violin concertos by Bach.

Plus, the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra perform music by Dmitri Shostakovich, marking 50 years since his death. Today, the orchestra bring us the witty and precocious First Symphony, conducted by John Storgards.

Also on the programme, British-Iranian soprano Soraya Mafi and pianist Ian Tindale offer their interpretation of songs by Schubert.

The Hominid Score Ben Garrod, Professor of Evolutionary Biology at the University of East Anglia is on a mission to uncover a world of unexpected rhythm and melody across nature and in doing so, question our assumptions about the boundaries of musical expression and its role. In this final essay, he draws upon his experiences as a primatologist, having lived and worked alongside monkeys and apes – to understand at which point and why, music features so heavily in our own story. From the practical roles of highly choreographed melodic duets of gibbons to the way creative drumming and calls produced by chimpanzees play in generating emotional states, that shed light on how music has become so influential for us as humans. With contributions from Dr Dena Clink, bioacoustics researcher at Cornell University; Dr Rebecca Wrage Sykes, archaeologist, author and honorary research fellow at Universities of Liverpool and Cambridge Presented by Professor Ben Garrod Produced by Adrian Washbourne Mixed by Julian Mayers Executive Producer: Rami Tzabar A YadaYada Production for BBC Radio 3 FRI 22:00 Late Junction (m002j6nv) Radiophonic lullabies and distorted dreams Jennifer Lucy Allan presents your weekly dose of adventurous explorations in sound. There'll be distorted cello sounds from Seattle, composed by Nirvana's cello player Lori Goldston, who hopes to give her listeners room to breathe and dream. Leo Chadburn also brings a dream-like labyrinthine recollection of misty quarries, disused railway lines, and shadowy monumental factory buildings, via closed-mic spoken word, vibraphone, wine glasses and drones. Plus a sonic dedication to "Radium Girls", female factory workers exposed to radioactive luminous paint, courtesy of Phew, Dieter Moebius and Erika Kobayashi,	composed in the shadow of the Fukushima nuclear accident in 2011. This weekday late-night show celebrates the thriving UK jazz scene and spotlights the best new music alongside incredible acts from past decades. Tonight we hear from genre-transcending US trumpeter Theo Croker. Soweto caught up with Theo backstage at the Fire Station in Sunderland ahead of his headline performance at our inaugural 'Round Midnight Prom in July. Theo and Soweto discussed everything from the jazz greats he was mentored by, the dissolution of genre, and the power of manifesting. Also in the programme, Soweto shares more concert highlights from Theo's 'Round Midnight Prom performance. Theo was joined by his powerhouse quartet featuring pianist Idris Frederick, bassist Eric Wheeler, and drummer Jeremiah Collier.
