1492: The Fall of Granada

In February 1492, in the gardens of the Alhambra Palace, Granada, a Moorish musician named Ayaya Fisteli bows before the thrones of the newly installed Catholic monarchs, Ferdinand and Isabella. Only weeks earlier, the Emirate of Granada had formally surrendered, ending more than seven centuries of Muslim rule in Iberia. Now Fisteli stands beneath the intricate domes of the Hall of the Ambassadors, waiting to learn whether he may continue as Warden of the Minstrels and jongleurs under the new regime – a moment that opens a wider story about cultural exchange, upheaval and the musical life of late medieval Spain.

Gillian Moore is joined by a roster of distinguished historians for this major new BBC Radio 3 series, charting a course through 1000 years of classical music history. For the first eight programmes, historian Michael Wood is in the chair, as together they explore the bold new sound worlds of the Middle Ages and Renaissance.

SAT 14:00 Record Review (m002vnmh)

Vivaldi's Four Seasons in Building a Library with Charlotte Gardner and Andrew McGregor

Andrew McGregor with the best of the week's new classical releases.

c2.10pm

Early music expert Kirsten Gibson joins Andrew to showcase a batch of releases that have caught her ear.

3pm

Building a Library. Critic Charlotte Gardner surveys recordings of Vivaldi's The Four Seasons and makes a top recommendation.

Published in 1725, the collection of four violin concertos with musical representations of the changing year have become Antonio Vivaldi's best known works. Their vivid nature depictions were groundbreaking - flowing creeks, singing birds, a shepherd and his barking dog, buzzing flies, a dramatic storm, drunken dancers, frozen landscapes, and warm winter fires. It's no wonder every major violinist of the last 80 years has wanted to record them.

c3.50pm

Record of the Week. Andrew's top pick of this week's new releases.

SAT 16:00 Sound of Cinema (m002vnmk)

Edith is joined by Eimear Noone and presenter Jason Mohammad

Join Edith Bowman each week as she delves into the best music from film and television. On this week's programme, Edith is joined by composer and conductor Eimear Noone, who unpacks her score for The Canterville Ghost, written alongside Craig Stuart Garfinkle, in this week's Harmonising Hollywood. We'll also be welcoming presenter Jason Mohammad, who shares his Pick of the Flicks — a much-loved score by Ennio Morricone.

Also, expect our usual mix of music from newly released soundtracks alongside timeless Hollywood classics.

SAT 17:00 This Classical Life (m002vnm)

Jess Gillam with... Tom Fetherstonhaugh

Jess Gillam is joined by conductor Tom Fetherstonhaugh, who is the founder and artistic director of Fantasia Orchestra. He was Assistant Conductor of the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra between 2022-2024 and was awarded Associate Honours from the Royal Academy of Music in 2024 for his contribution to the music profession. He's performed at the BBC Proms with Fantasia Orchestra and has also worked with Welsh National Opera, Britten Sinfonia and the BBC Philharmonic.

Tom's picks include an arresting piece by Witold Lutosławski, Schubert's String Quartet No 15, a reworking of a classic jazz standard by Gwilym Simcock, and the infectious energy of Balimaya Project. Jess brings along pieces by Mozart, Bach, and King Curtis.

SAT 18:00 Opera on 3 (m002vnm)

Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin

Live from the Metropolitan Opera in New York, starring Asmik Grigorian as Tatiana and Iurii Samoilov as Eugene Onegin, conducted by Timur Zangiev. When bookish Tatiana meets Eugene Onegin, she's immediately smitten and naively declares her feelings in a letter. He dismisses her, but years later and much too late realises he loves her back.

Presented from the Met by Debra Lew Harder and Ira Siff.

Tchaikovsky: Eugene Onegin
Tatiana ..... Asmik Grigorian (soprano)
Eugene Onegin ..... Iurii Samoilov (baritone)
Lenski ..... Stanislas de Barbeyrac (tenor)
Olga ..... Maria Barakova (mezzo-soprano)
Filippievna ..... Larissa Diadkova (mezzo-soprano)
Prince Gremin ..... Alexander Tsymbalyuk (bass-baritone)
Met Opera Chorus and Orchestra
Timur Zangiev (conductor)

The opera is based on Pushkin's iconic verse novel, which reimagines the Byronic romantic anti-hero as the definitive bored Russian aristocrat caught between convention and ennui; Tchaikovsky, similarly, took Western European operatic forms and transformed them into an authentic and undeniably Russian work. At the core of the opera is the young girl Tatiana, who grows from a sentimental adolescent into a complete woman in one of the operatic stage's most convincing character developments.

Eavesdropping: Siwan Rhys and Émilie Škrijelj

Tom Service with live sets from pianist Siwan Rhys and experimental accordionist Émilie Škrijelj recorded at the Eavesdropping festival in London plus orchestral music by Rebecca Saunders and a re-imagining of Ligeti's Atmosphères by composer Tom Pauwels. Among the new releases this week are tracks from upsammy & Valentina Magaletti, Tyler Friedman and Jose Martinez, plus we hear from composer-producer Matt Wright about his latest project Cracked Glaze, a collaboration between his own group Spheric Totemic and The Hague-based Ensemble Klang.

Three Hours of Classical Sparkle

Sarah Walker chooses uplifting music to complement your morning, whether you're enjoying a quiet coffee, preparing for Sunday lunch or heading into the outdoors.

This week, Sarah has a mixture of orchestral gems, delicate piano music and luscious choral textures to enliven your day. Her Sunday Sequence has a humorous feel to reflect the fact it is World Laughter Day – can you guess what she's going to include? And there's also a chance to hear from a fabulous complete recording of Beethoven's First Symphony.

Also, Sarah's choral reflection takes us to the skies with Charles Villiers Stanford's most beloved partsong, "The Blue Bird".

James Aldred, cameraman and writer

James Aldred is an Emmy award-winning documentary wildlife cameraman and filmmaker who has collaborated with David Attenborough on projects such as Planet Earth, The Life of Mammals and Our Planet. He often finds himself suspended from ropes or on platforms high up in the rainforest canopy, capturing shots of rarely-seen animals and birds, including orangutans, gibbons and eagles.

He recalled some of his treetop adventures - and the many dangers he's faced - in his first book, The Man Who Climbs Trees. His second, Goshawk Summer, detailed his experience of filming a family of goshawks in the New Forest during lockdown. It went on to win the Wainwright Prize for Nature Writing. His most recent book, A Wagon in the Woods, returns to the New Forest and is about his painstaking restoration of an old horse-drawn wagon he once played in as a child.

James picks music by Borodin, Wagner, Mahler, Bach and John Barry.

Music on the Front Line

Caroline Wyatt

Clive Myrie is in conversation with fellow journalists about the music they've heard whilst reporting from the front line. With his own extensive experience of covering wars, and his personal love of opera and jazz, Clive and Caroline Wyatt share stories to reveal something of the power and significance of music when working in extreme conflict situations.

Caroline Wyatt is a BBC presenter and journalist. She began her career as a BBC foreign correspondent based in Berlin, Bonn, Moscow and Paris. During that period, she reported from Iraq, Kosovo, Chechnya, and the Middle East. She was then BBC Defence Correspondent covering operations in Iraq and Afghanistan before becoming BBC Religious Affairs Correspondent.

She is now a presenter for Radio 4 Saturday PM.

Here she recalls the music that accompanied her working life on the front line including Barber's Adagio for Strings, Venus the Bringer of Peace from Holst's The Planets and Bach's Magnificat in D major.

Finding Florence Mills

Allyson Devenish goes in search of Florence Mills.

In the 1920s, Florence Mills was probably one of the most famous women alive and certainly the first black international celebrity, and yet she has faded from the collective cultural memory. This is partly because there are no recordings of her: no 78s of her singing nor film of her dancing, and she's almost entirely absent from histories of jazz.

She was there at the birth of the Harlem Renaissance, rocketing to fame in the musical Shuffle Along. When she died, all of Harlem turned out for her funeral, with hundreds of thousands of people thronging the streets.

Florence also had a powerful impact in the UK, where she performed in two smash hit stage shows. Audiences and critics were enraptured, but her impact was felt beyond the showbiz pages of the newspapers. She was revered by jazz musicians, composers and critics of classical music for her extraordinary voice, as well as by pioneers of British dance. And she spoke out, with eloquence, about the politics of race.

The pianist Allyson Devenish doesn't think Florence Mills has been remembered or celebrated in the way that she deserves and sets out to look for her in the traces that she left: the memories of people that knew her, the accounts of her performance and the music written especially for her.

Allyson hears from Steph Doktor about her attempt to recover Florence's voice and sits down with Eric Mealer from the National Opera Studio to try and make sense of the reports and reviews of Florence's singing.

Other contributors include Celeste Headlee, William Grant Still's granddaughter, the singer Elaine Mitchener, historians Stephen Bourne, Jane Pritchard, Caroline Bressy and Catherine Tackley.

Attenborough at 100: a World of Animals

As David Attenborough's 100th birthday approaches, Hugh Bonneville and Anne-Marie Duff read poetry and prose inspired by animals: from sloths, hawks and crocodiles, to wolves, elephants and snakes, alongside an archive recording of Attenborough himself reading from Life Stories, his memoir of seventy years of world-class nature broadcasting. We'll visit all seven continents in readings from Michael Crichton's Jurassic Park to Isabel Allende's Paradise to Kari Herbert's Antarctica, and hear poetry from Lorca to AA Milne and Pascale Petit. Music inspired by and evoking all manner of creatures and plants, includes pieces by Camille Saint-Saens, Claude Debussy and Elena Kats-Chernin and George Fenton's scores for Attenborough's nature documentaries.

Erland Cooper: Series 5

Finding calm up in the clouds ft. Sally Potter

Throughout this series of Ultimate Calm, Scottish composer Erland Cooper has been looking to nature for inspiration. We've ebbed and flowed with the tides, dug our hands into the soil, and in this episode we turn our attention skywards - with soothing songs that lift us into the clouds from musicians including Nailah Hunter, Sarah Davachi and Jóhann Jóhannsson.

We're also transported to the musical safe haven of the award-winning film director and musician Sally Potter. She shares a special piece of music that flows like water or breath, that always induces calm melancholy in her.

SUN 23:30 Unclassified (m002vndc)

Fluxus

Join Elizabeth Alker with a selection of fresh music from genre-defying artists as we journey through landscapes of ambient and experimental sounds. This week, we'll travel back in time via the dungeon-synth textures and medieval ambience of Graham Reynolds' album 'The Portcullis'; music from an exciting collaboration between acclaimed songwriter Eliza Shaddad and the composer Daniel Sonabend; and another chance to hear the brilliant piece composed and performed by Carmel Smickersgill especially for Unclassified, marking last year's centenary of Eric Satie's death.

We'll also hear, of course, music from emerging independent producers whose work plays with orchestral textures and classical form as well as the latest sounds from a new generation of contemporary composers who look to embrace the spirit of rock, pop and electronica.

The Apple

A mysterious folk tune ignites Bartók's imagination.

Béla Bartók was regarded as one of Hungary's greatest composers. His fellow countryman, the pianist Andras Schiff, called him "one of the giants in the history of music." But he was also one of the founders of what we now call ethnomusicology, spending much of his time immersed in peasant life, collecting folk songs. As around him Europe was torn apart by conflict, Bartók found relief in rural life and took inspiration from these traditional tunes, incorporating them into his own compositions.

In today's programme, Donald Macleod explores Bartók's early years and the chance encounter that changed the trajectory of his composing.

The Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra performs Saint-Saëns, Tchaikovsky and Boulanger

Cédric Tiberghien joins the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra for Tchaikovsky's ever-popular Piano Concerto no.1. This is surrounded by a programme of French music, including Lili Boulanger's D'un matin de printemps and Saint-Saëns' Organ Symphony.

Recorded last month at Lighthouse, Poole, and presented by Al Ryan.

Chloé Van Soeterstède (conductor)

Unlike the eponymous charioteer's skills, Saint-Saëns technical skills were at their peak in his tone poem Phaeton: its galloping steeds racing to a catastrophic demise before a final lament for youthful hubris. Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto is an exuberant and passionate work filled with uninhibited virtuosity. It remains refreshingly original with its exciting and altogether exceptional opening, and richly forged musical dramas of powerful virtuosity and uncommon sensitivity. A lyrical sensibility defines Lili Boulanger's bright and festive picture of a carefree spring morning with its arabesque-like playfulness and delicate, highly transparent instrumentation. Saint-Saëns said that he had "given everything I was able to give" to his Third Symphony, and this shows in its virtuosic piano passages, brilliant orchestral writing and the audacious use of organ. It reveals a genuine flair for sumptuous orchestral colour, suave and unforgettable melody and brilliant craftsmanship - the zenith of his symphonic output. There is simply nothing else quite like it.

The Insect Singers

1. Let Those Bugs Sing

The Essay celebrates the musicality and noise of our insect singers. 1. Let Those Bugs Sing.

Long before the first birds took to the sky, katydids and crickets filled the air with their sonorous stridulations. The sound of summer and autumn is one of vibrating tymbals, chirps, trills, xits, tsips and kreeeeeaks! Katydids, Crickets, Cicadas. Now we can listen very carefully to a blade of grass and enter a near-secret world of vibrating treehoppers. Writer and musician David Rothenberg has long been fascinated our relationship with all this noise and explores how insects taught us to love rhythm.

'This is the music of the world, going back millions of years. We evolved in the midst of these sounds and that counts for something'

 Berlioz Symphonie fantastique

Chief guest conductor of the BBC Philharmonic, Anja Bihlmaier, joins the orchestra to present a programme which dares to look into dark corners as well as celebrate life-affirming moments.

"Big, Beautiful, Dark and Scary", by the orchestra's Pulitzer prize-winning Composer in Residence, is a bold description of her experience of the September 11, 2001 attack on the Twin Towers in New York. She was two blocks away when the planes hit, and this is a gripping, multi-layered portrayal of the atmosphere witnessed by so many.

Berlioz's "Symphonie fantastique" explores the darkest parts of the composer's own mind; an opium-addled nightmare of supernatural forces, unrequited love and his own death portrayed in music. A composer with an unparalleled knowledge and passion for the potential of every instrument in the orchestra, he used this to maximum effect, and his music still terrifies and astounds with drama and direct communication.

Bomsori Kim joins the orchestra for Tchaikovsky's virtuoso Violin Concerto. Singable melody and infectious dance combine to create optimistic music, and a brief moment of homesickness - he wrote the music in Geneva, away from home - colours the glowing centre of the piece, but the music leaves us overwhelmingly positive.

Recorded at Manchester's Bridgewater Hall on 25 April 2026 and presented by Mark Forrest.

 The Insect Singers

2. Katydids - All Night Long

The Essay celebrates the musicality of Earth's insect singers. 2. Katydids - All Night Long.

Naturalist and sound recordist Wil Hershberger hunts the sounds and songs of a multitude of North America's stridulating wonders for his ever-expanding website Songs of Insects. "Creating some kind of a sound was perhaps the best and only way for these species to communicate over long distances. And I'm sure it started out with some kind of incidental sound, tapping a body part against some hard surface, whatever it was. It finally evolved into this gorgeous, complex system that they use now, the richness of all of these different insects and their different songs. It's probably the first song of the planet Earth. And it's one of those things that gives you goosebumps, that this sound has lasted for hundreds of millions of years and still continues today."

Entomologist Charlie Woodrow, based at the University of Lincoln, journeys deep into tropical rain forests with head torch & ultrasound recording device in search of Spiny Devil Katydid or the elusive Supersonus. Some are almost invisible; many project their love songs into sonic reaches way beyond human hearing. "They are the most acoustically diverse group of organisms on the planet, in terms of just the pitch of sound alone. They vary from around 600 hertz, so a very low pitch kind of, kind of the frequency of communication for human language, up to the most ultrasonic insect sounds in nature."

As told to producer Mark Burman

Bela Bartok (1881-1945)

Bluebeard

Bartók recovers from romantic rejection.

Béla Bartók was regarded as one of Hungary's greatest composers. His fellow countryman, the pianist Andras Schiff, called him "one of the giants in the history of music." But he was also one of the founders of what we now call ethnomusicology, spending much of his time immersed in peasant life, collecting folk songs. As around him Europe was torn apart by conflict, Bartók found relief in rural life and took inspiration from these traditional tunes, incorporating them into his own compositions.

In today's programme, Donald finds out who would provide a salve for Bartók's heartache.

Mozart's Requiem

Vocal soloists and choral forces join the Scottish Chamber Orchestra and conductor Riccardo Minasi for two compelling classical works.

As Haydn composed a mass for his royal patrons, Austria prepared to defend itself against Napoleon's military advances. The bombardment seeped into Haydn's music and the work's title, 'Mass in Time of War'. Following Haydn's death, it was the Requiem by his late friend Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart that was chosen to be played at the state memorial.

The Insect Singers

3. Cicada Summer Song

The Essay celebrates the sheer musicality and noise of Earth's loudest insect singers. 3. Cicada Summer Song.

Cicadas are the heavy metal section of the insect world. Billions can make as much noise as a jumbo jet with their vibrating tymbals. Emerging from the warming earth to shed their skins and sing their love songs all summer long. Celebrated by the ancients of China, Japan, Greece and the Maori of New Zealand. In the hot dawn of a Bangalore forest, engineer Rakesh Khanna captures a Cicada symphony triggered by the sun's rays. Poet and architect Phoebe Giannisi delves into the myths, poetry and love of cicada song, the Tettix of ancient Greece. In 21st-century New Zealand, bio-acoustician Julia Kaspar discovered a cupboard of earthly delights at the Tepapa Museum in Wellington. The cicada recordings of Charles Fleming, who, in the 1960s, enlisted his entire family & islanders in an early version of citizen science. Identifying and recording an extraordinary range of song that doubled New Zealand's species count.

Tonight's mixtape opens in the Appalachian Mountains with the first movement of Appalachian Spring by Aaron Copland. From there, Camille Saint-Saëns's Romance carries us forward with effortless grace, leading into the delicate glow of Alexander Scriabin's Prelude No. 3 in E major.

A brief moment of stillness follows with In monte Oliveti by Orlande de Lassus, before a haunting arrangement of Scarlatti's Sonata in A minor for harp. We turn to song without words: Felix Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte No. 6, "Frühlingslied" in A major. Tchaikovsky's Symphony No.2

Sir Mark Elder returns to Manchester and is reunited with the Hallé and Hallé Choir in this fantastic programme of Russian music.

He opens the concert with Glinka's dazzling, high-energy overture that captures the magical, adventurous spirit of his opera Ruslan and Ludmilla, which is followed by Stravinsky's Song of the Nightingale - an effective musical illustration of both real and mechanical birdsong.

Based on the poem by Nikolay Nekrasov, Rachmaninov's Spring follows a husband who, previously inflicted with murderous thoughts towards his unfaithful wife during the winter, is released from his frustration with the return of spring. After the interval, Tchaikovsky's Second Symphony, known for its effective use of Ukrainian folksongs, provides a joyful end to the evening.

The Insect Singers

4. Autumn Cricket Song

The Essay celebrates the musicality of Earth's insect singers. 4. Autumn Cricket Song.

Perhaps the most beautiful of all insect song. A stridulation that begins in summer and edges into the melancholy of autumn. Their music has largely been lost in the UK. But elsewhere they sing from trees and amid the long grass with a song borne on the heat and penetrating the dusk like sweet magic. There are 5525 species of Grylloidea (True Crickets And Allies) and 331 of those still exist in China. Mr Fung aka Lars Fredriksson fell in love with their beautiful music as a student there. For centuries, they have been caged and kept both for fighting prowess and soothing song. Ancient manuals of instruction detail the care and feeding of crickets - even how to change their pitch with a tiny drop of resin. He has hunted for them in the Yellow Mountains and created cricket orchestras and understands their deep appeal. "There is the melancholy of the lone male who is singing to court a female that is not around or wants to attract a female. This is also at the end of your life, at autumn, is actually a euphemism for enjoying crickets."

Bela Bartok (1881-1945)

Night Music

Bartók faces a big decision: stay in Hungary or leave forever?

Béla Bartók was regarded as one of Hungary's greatest composers. His fellow countryman, the pianist Andras Schiff, called him "one of the giants in the history of music." But he was also one of the founders of what we now call ethnomusicology, spending much of his time immersed in peasant life, collecting folk songs. As around him Europe was torn apart by conflict, Bartók found relief in rural life and took inspiration from these traditional tunes, incorporating them into his own compositions.

In today's programme, Donald Macleod finds Bartók facing big decisions: whether to part company with his wife: and whether to stay in Hungary, the country whose music he'd dedicated a lifetime to, or leave it behind.

Attenborough at 100

A specially curated sequence of some of Sir David Attenborough's favourite music tracks, as part of the BBC's celebration of Attenborough's 100th birthday today. The sequence includes tracks that Attenborough loved and took with him to listen to on his many trips across the world making nature series, including the poignant trio from Mozart's Così fan tutte, the aria from Bach's Goldberg Variations, and a traditional Paraguayan song played on the harp, the Bell Bird. Also in the mix, a couple of short introductions from Attenborough himself, and some atmospheric soundtrack music from his nature programmes.

The Insect Singers

5. Good Vibrations - Treehoppers

The Insect Singers sound their last with a hidden world of astonishing dynamic range. All on the self-contained world of a plant stem. 5. Good Vibrations - Treehoppers.

Through the science of biotremology, Rex Cocroft and a handful of others have been revealing the extraordinarily sonorous world of vibrational communication by the sometimes bizarre, often beautiful, branch of Cicadomorpha - the Treehoppers. Tiny, yet able to resonate through a blade of grass - transforming it into a green amplifier - or a leaf or plant stem as soon as they hatch out from the egg. Whole societies existing on a single plant communicating their mating calls and warnings and collectively making decisions through their ability to sound every part of their body. Rex Cocroft, now at the University of Missouri, had harboured musical dreams as a student before returning to his first love of the natural world. His entry into this little-studied world came as an extraordinary revelation.

"It was music, it was a sound I had never heard before. Just about everything I heard was completely new, not just not heard by me but really anybody. The truth is, the world is much richer and more beautiful than we ever imagined because the world created by singing insects within our plants is so beautiful and a deep mystery."

Attenborough at 100: The Wild Life of Sound

On Sir David Attenborough's 100th birthday, Verity Sharp presents a mixtape that celebrates the ways in which recorded sound and acts of listening-imagining can bring us into a close relationship with other species. Assembled as a collaboration between artist and researcher Rebecca Lennon and writer Ella Finer, the mixtape moves through musical and sonic worlds that variously abstract, reimagine and commune with human and more than human presences. Breath, vibration, rhythm, waggle - we meet the heartbeat of a swan, the voice of a whale, the purr of a cheetah, the sonorous lives of bees, foxes and street dogs. Finer's concept of "the wild life of sound" speaks to something that the sonic and the creaturely realms share in common: a freedom from ownership, a resistance to neat categorisation, a space where connection can happen.

George Nelson's Mixtape

Violinist and vocalist Alice Zawadzki sits in for Soweto Kinch this week on 'Round Midnight. This weekday late-night show celebrates the thriving UK jazz scene and spotlights the best new music alongside incredible acts from past decades.

Alice's Friday night mixtape guest is the photographer, author, and lecturer George Nelson. George is the curator of leading London-based gig series Moment's Notice, which has featured artists including Courtney Pine, Yazz Ahmed, and Bex Burch. The nights feature a first set of a trio and a duo, each performing entirely improvised music.

In the spirit of Moment's Notice, tonight's mixtape features a selection of music by artists performing in duos and trios.
