Martin Evans

Kirsty Young's castaway this week is the Nobel Prize-winning scientist Professor Sir Martin Evans. He is known as the grandfather of embryonic stem-cell research because of the breakthrough he made more than 25 years ago to first isolate the stem cells of mice and then cultivate them in a laboratory. After that leap forward, he worked alongside his fellow Nobel laureates Oliver Smithies and Mario Capecchi to develop the Knock-Out Mouse - a mouse that has had part of its genetic code disabled so the effect on the animal can be studied. The Knock-Out Mouse has become a scientific tool used the world over - and has vastly increased the amount of knowledge we have about how the human body works.

Brought up on the outskirts of London with enthusiastic and encouraging parents, he says that he was always fascinated by science. But, although he was a bright pupil, he was a shy boy and not the kind of student to walk away with glittering prizes.

He was within months of retiring when he got the call, last October, that he had been awarded the greatest honour in science - the Nobel Prize - since then life has been busier than ever and now, he says, he is determined to use his status to try to encourage children to study science, so that they too can be enthused at the miracles of the world around us and the worlds within.

Irish Illusions

Archaeologist George Nash explores five of Western Europe's most remarkable rock art sites.

George visits County Meath in Ireland where strange patterns adorn the walls of the Fourknocks Passage Grave. What do the patterns mean?

George finds himself being stared at by a very odd cartoon-like face inside a 5000-year-old Irish tomb. It's a very early example of what we now call "graffiti" - and around it are hypnotic patterns of concentric circles, horizontal zigzags and strings of diamond shapes. Strangely similar carvings occur in Wales, Brittany and the Iberian peninsula. So who created them? What do they all mean? And who was copying who in Neolithic times?

George teams up with the modern-day Muslim graffiti artist Mohammed Ali to study these patterns for their spiritual significance, which may just lie in the fact that they are not as perfect as they seem. And he considers the possibility that Stone Age Man may well have been 'stoned' when he created them.

SUN 16:00 Open Book (b008yn1f)
Bernhard Schlink, Memoir Writing for Beginners, and New Grub Street

Bernhard Schlink
In 1997 Bernhard Schlink, a German law professor, had a surprise international bestseller when the English translation of his novel The Reader was published. This story about a concentration camp guard made Schlink the first German novelist to top the New York Times bestseller chart. This month Schlink's first novel since The Reader reaches British bookshops. Homecoming tells the story of a publisher's attempt to find a novel which has obsessed him since childhood, and like its predecessor deals with Germany's continuing attempts to come to terms with the events of the Third Reich. Bernhard Schlink talks to Mariella Frostrup about his generation's interest in these events, the relationship between his life as a writer and his profession as a legal academic.

Memoir Writing for Beginners
One of this month's more unusual publications is a completely blank book. Entitled My Story, it's a memoir-writing kit aimed at the complete beginner, and comes with a small paperback offering instruction and advice. Mariella is joined by the biographer and memoirist Miranda Seymour to discuss how the would-be autobiographer can get started.

Politicians' Audio Books
Last week's Grammy awards ceremony in Los Angeles featured an unlikely literary stand-off in the Spoken Word category, when former Presidents Bill Clinton and Jimmy Carter were beaten to the prize by the Democratic presidential hopeful Barack Obama. To discuss why all America's leading politicians seem to be making audio books these days, Mariella is joined from New York by the critic John Freeman.

New Grub Street
In 1891 the novelist George Gissing published one of the classic fictional treatments of literary life. New Grub Street is a satirical, sometimes melodramatic, novel about two writers, Edwin Reardon and Jasper Milvain, and their desperate attempts to earn enough to stay alive by the pen alone. Mariella is joined by two fans of the book, the writer and critic D. J. Taylor, and Christopher Douglas, the co-writer and star of the Radio 4 comedy Ed Reardon's Week, who explains his own debt to Gissing.

SUN 16:30 Poetry Please (b008zk9g)

SLUM TRAVELLERS
For upper class women of the two generations preceding World War I, the poorest parts of London exerted a magnetic pull. Thousands of women from the 'best circles', turned their backs on the season, balls, parties and picnics and headed for the slums; some of them living incognito with the poor to better understand their predicament. Laurie Taylor talks to Professor Ellen Ross, author of a new book Slum Travellers which explores these women's experiences and the impact they had on attitudes to the poor. Joining the discussion is writer and journalist Polly Toynbee who went undercover amongst Britain's low-paid workers to discover the realities of life on minimum wage.

MON 19:00 The Archers (b008yx3f)

Mike tells Caroline how upset Roy and Hayley are at not getting 1. The Green. Caroline suggests converting Willow Farm into two houses, which Mike thinks is a stroke of genius. Roy agrees it's an amazing idea, and can't wait to tell Hayley. With just a small mortgage to cover the cost of the conversion, Roy thinks it's really generous. Mike admits he's also being selfish - this way he gets to keep them close by.

Matt's becoming a regular in Grey Gables restaurant, and Caroline feels sorry for him. Even though he insists he doesn't need her pity, Matt quickly accept Caroline's offer of dinner at Grange Farm next Monday.

Increasingly frustrated, Jolene tells Lilian that her attempts to manage things just aren't working. Lilian gets upset about the whole situation, leaving Jolene feeling awkward.

Jennifer and Lilian moan about their men. Jennifer's still reeling from the fact that Brian's made a new will and Lilian thinks Matt's probably moved Annabelle into the Dower House. Writing her diary is therapeutic but she's all for Jennifer's proposal to hit the shops tomorrow and do their men some damage where it hurts - in their wallets.

Lilian's enjoying the retail therapy until she notices Annabelle in Underwoods' lingerie department. Lilian's mind starts working overtime and to Jennifer's dismay Lilian's determined to follow Annabelle around the store.

Adam coldly tells Brian that he's viewing a digester in Scotland next week and gives Brian no choice but to look after the stock while he's away.

The brewery delivers late. Jolene learns that Lilian's asked them to, because their clanking has been waking her up. Jolene's had enough of Lilian's interfering and insists Sid speaks to her.

It's weigh-in night. Sid's surprised Eddie's drinking at lunchtime but Eddie's not worried. He's convinced he'll be winner of the week again, and he's right! Even wearing his fleece, Eddie still manages to lose another two pounds and keeps his title.

Back at The Bull, Eddie lets it slip that everyone except Sabrina cried off from Sid's pre-meeting run. Jolene's not pleased and insists there'll be no more runs. Lilian walks in and Jolene suggests this is Sid's chance. But Lilian's distressed and just wants to go to her room. Even Jolene admits she's looking dreadful. Sid assures Jolene he'll find the right time to talk to Lilian, sooner or later.

Superheroes - Ribbon Culture

SUPERHEROES

General fascination with the idea of a superhero is extraordinarily enduring. Superman, Batman and Spider-Man have survived translations from the comic page into a range of media and have somehow been able to adapt to social circumstances quite different to those which surrounded their original creation. Laurie Taylor talks to cultural commentator Roz Kaveney about her study entitled Superheroes! Capes and Crusaders in Comics and Films; They are joined by Kim Newman, author of Cat People and Apocalypse Movies to discuss the enduring appeal of Superheroes.

RIBBON CULTURE

The first ribbon campaign was led by Penelope Laingen in 1979. However, awareness ribbons did not become internationally popular until the 1990s with the introduction of the Red Ribbon Campaign for AIDS awareness. Researcher Sarah Moore, in her recently published book Ribbon Culture: Charity, Compassion, and Public Awareness, says that popular Ribbon Culture came about initially as a means of going against the grain, by focussing on controversial topics. But although charities claim that ribbons spread awareness, she thinks that it has become a fashion item, making giving to charity easy without the need to really consider the cause it 'supports'.

WED 19:00 The Archers (b008yx31)

Pat's pleased that Helen's going to be backing her up at tonight's meeting to discuss the proposal for the anaerobic digester. Helen's glad to have something to take her mind off Greg's birthday tomorrow.

David and Adam are busy putting flyers out in the village hall. They're both pleasantly surprised by the quality of Bert's model of the digester but when Susan sees it she just wishes the actual development was staying model size. Mike thinks the digester's a great idea and it's clear from people's initial reactions that there's a strong mix of opinion.

Oliver opens the meeting. After Adam outlines the proposal everyone gets a chance to voice their opinion. It's a very lively debate.

Later at the Bull Adam approaches Pat and Helen and tells them he assumes they'll back off now that it seems the majority are behind the scheme. But Pat's still determined to lodge an objection. Adam's taken aback by this and suggests there's no need for Pat to stir things up but Pat makes it clear that this isn't personal. Her principles come first and she's sorry but that's not going to change.

THU 09:00 In Our Time (b008z744)

The Multiverse

Melvyn Bragg and guests will be leaving the studio, the planet and indeed, the universe to take a tour of the Multiverse. If you look up the word 'universe' in the Oxford English Dictionary you will find the following definition: "The whole of created or existing things regarded collectively; all things (including the earth, the heavens, and all the phenomena of space) considered as constituting a systematic whole." That sounds fairly comprehensive as a description of everything, but for an increasing number of physicists and cosmologists the universe is not enough. They talk of a multiverse – literally many universes – to explain aspects of their theory, the character of the universe and the riddle of our existence within it. Indeed, compared to the scope and complexity of the multiverse, the whole of our known reality may be as a speck of sand upon a beach. The idea of a multiverse is still controversial, some argue that it isn't even science, because it is based on an idea that we may never be able to prove or even see. But what might a multiverse be like, why are physicists and cosmologists increasingly interested in it and is it really scientific to discuss the existence of universes we may never know anything? With Martin Rees, President of the Royal Society and Professor of Cosmology and Astrophysics at the University of Cambridge; Fay Dowker, Reader in Theoretical Physics at Imperial College; Bernard Carr, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy at Queen Mary, University of London

Solar Panel Technology - Gravitational Lenses

Solar Panel Technology

In just 40 minutes on a sunny day in the UK, we receive enough energy from the Sun to provide the country's entire energy requirements for a whole year. Quentin Cooper finds out how we can make more use of the Sun. Why are solar panels currently so inefficient and how can the blackness of a moth's eye could help improve our ray catching abilities? Quentin is joined by Professor Ken Durose, Director of the Durham centre for Renewable Energy, University of Durham and Dr Darren Bagnall from the School of Electronics and Computer Science, University of Southampton.

Gravitational Lenses

Why do stars act like a magnifying glass in the heavens? Astronomers have just discovered two giant gas planets orbiting a star which bear a striking resemblance to Jupiter and Saturn. Quentin finds out about how are these discoveries are being made - by using predictions made by Einstein in his theory of Relativity and searching the sky for one in a million events. Quentin is joined by Professor Keith Horne, Head of Astronomy, School of Astronomy at the University of St. Andrews and Dr Nicholas Rattenbury from the Jodrell Bank Centre of Astrophysics, University of Manchester.

Series 4

Catherine Tate interviews David Tennant

Two Doctor Who stalwarts meet. Catherine Tate takes the host's chair as she talks to - or mercilessly teases - David Tennant.

Chain Reaction is the tag talk show with a twist where the guest becomes the interviewer in the next show.

Based on the original 1991 BBC Radio 5 programme of the same name, Chain Reaction is a simple idea of big name stars from the world of entertainment interviewing others whose work they appreciate and admire.

Recorded with an audience, the interviews focus on the life, career and the passions of the interviewee but often prove to be as revealing about the interviewer.

Producer: Tilusha Ghelani.

First broadcast on BBC Radio 4 in February 2008.

THU 19:00 The Archers (b008yx34)

Helen sees Will by Greg's tree and is pleased he remembered it would have been Greg's birthday. Will tells Helen how difficult things are for Nic, being new to the village, and is chuffed when Helen offers to call on Nic. Nic really appreciates talking to someone who understands life with a gamekeeper, and finds herself confiding in Helen.

Pip has finally come clean about Jonathan. They're working together on a song for the Young Farmers' entertainment competition but she's practising at Jonathan's. It seems she still doesn't want David and Ruth to meet him.

Phil's buying a £400 telescope. Ruth thinks it's worth it if he's going to share it with Daniel.

Phil admits he's uneasy about the anaerobic digester but trusts David to make the right decision. David wishes Pat shared Phil's family loyalty. He also tells Ruth that things are still bad between Adam and Brian, now that Brian's gone ahead with the new will. Ruth realises they too could be looking at a three-way inheritance for Brookfield if Josh and Ben turn out to be as keen as Pip. David jokes that they need to meet Pip's boyfriend soon. After all, he might end up inheriting the place!

Episode written by Nawal Gadalla.

DNA diversity and the AAAS

DNA diversity

We now have more information about our DNA than ever before to assist in reconstructing our genetic history. Richard Myers of Stanford University has used the tiny variations in our DNA make-up to produce the most detailed study yet of our origins and subsequent migration around the globe. To what extent does it support the Out of Africa theory?

AAAS

Geoff Watts also reports from the 2008 meeting in Boston of the American Association of the Advancement of Science which includes:

Earth-like planets

Michael Meyer has been tracing the evolution of rocky planets around other stars in our galaxy. New evidence suggests that rocky planets like Earth may be far more common than has been thought up to now.

Tracking baseball players

Statistician Shane Jensen has devised an ingenious way of quantifying the fielding performance of baseball players. It's harder than the more familiar analysis of pitchers or hitters. Could this be a valuable tool for cricket managers?

Sharks in Antarctica

As southern ocean waters warm, Richard Aronson of the Dauphin Island Sea Lab in Alaska predicts shell crushing crabs and sharks will return to the region. What effect will this have on the delicate and unique biodiversity?

Memory and predicting the future

Dan Schacter of Harvard University discusses newly discovered links between memory and imagination.

Alan feels that if he'd won the vote on the pews the church would be offering indoor activities to the local youngsters, which would stop them trashing the churchyard. He tells Rachel that he's feeling too stretched to be able to do any real good. Rachel encourages him to work on his passion and suggests a monthly parish walk. This appeals to Alan - especially as he knows Usha would be keen too. Rachel agrees it would be good to get her involved.

Brian and Adam are still at each other's throats. After a heated exchange, a phone call from Matt inviting Brian for a game of golf sounds like the ideal tonic. But it's clear that Matt just wants to know how Lilian's doing. Brian says that Lilian regrets walking out on him, and encourages him to make the first move. Matt insists that he's the injured party but agrees to go and talk to her.

However, with Adam's encouragement, Lilian's enjoying champagne cocktails in the Bull, and what Matt sees is far from a vulnerable, miserable victim. Turning to go, Matt tells Brian that Lilian's not missing him one bit. She's having the time of her life.
