 Anthony Minghella
 From Bach to Van Morrison.
 Playwright and film director Anthony Minghella shares his castaway choices with Sue Lawley.
 Anthony grew up on the Isle of Wight in a close-knit family of Italian descent, and says that he has never felt truly English.
 It is not surprising therefore that his most successful film explores questions of identity and nationality. That film, The English Patient, won nine Oscars. It is, he admits, unashamedly moving, since for him the purpose of fiction is to "exercise the emotional muscle".
 Music, too, plays an important part in his life. He listens to music as he writes and the structure of many of his plays and film scripts are influenced by it.
 First broadcast on BBC Radio 4 in November 1997.

SUN 17:00 A History of the World in 100 Objects Omnibus (b00vhf4l)
 The Threshold of the Modern World (AD 1375-1550)
 Neil MacGregor, the director of the British Museum in London, continues his global history as told through objects from the Museum's collection.
 In about 1450 a string of great empires dominated the world. The Ottoman Turks were threatening Europe with invasion. Asia was dominated by Ming China and the Timurid Empire, but the world's largest state was the Inca Empire in South America. Europe, in contrast, was a patchwork of squabbling powers. Yet there were the first signs of a shift towards a connection of all the world's continents by European exploration that would mark the beginning of a recognisably modern world. These new maritime empires brought Europe's fragmented kingdoms great wealth. The rhinoceros that inspired Durer's iconic print was a present from an Indian Sultan to a

Portuguese governor.
