Jonathan Agnew, the BBC's cricket correspondent and host of Test Match Special, looks back at the rebel cricket Tours to South Africa in 1987-88 to 1998-99. The conflict that sparked that first tour is still with us today. This week's story is that of the rebel Tours of 1993. That winter of '93-94 toured South Africa, despite a well established sporting boycott being in place.

"Women are like different fish in the sea. They have their basic femininity. Paretsky says of her Warshawski, a strong female character in a male-dominated world. VI never loses touch with her basic femininity. VI is a strong female character in a male-dominated world. She is a powerful, independent woman. She is a complex and passionate character. She is a female private investigator."
The eternal triangle.

The series intertwines the sort of comedy Paul has become known for, such as his take on the world of show business, with more personal material, and the comedy of facts and figures he has become famous for in the series. The final episode of the four-part series, Episode 4, features a return to the world of the music industry, with a special guest appearance by Josh Howie, who has become a household name in recent years.

The series ends with a performance by Paul Sinha, who has become a regular guest on the show. He performs a medley of songs, including a shout-out to his old band, The Toasters, and a tribute to his former boss, the late John Peel.

The show concludes with a final recording of the theme tune, with a special message from the producer, highlighting the success of the series and thanking the audience for their support.

In conclusion, Paul Sinha’s Last Christmas has been a resounding success, with a mix of personal stories and his unique brand of comedy, and has earned a place as one of the must-watch shows of the holiday season.
